INTRODUCTION.

THIS volume is printed from two manuscripts in the Library of the Society of Antiquaries, London : they are originals, and must have once belonged to Sir John Howard, successively Lord Howard and Duke of Norfolk, who was killed on Bosworth Field, fighting under the banners of Richard III.

In what manner, and at what period they came into the possession of the Society of Antiquaries does not appear ; but one of the manuscripts, the latest in point of date, seems formerly to have been the property of Martin of Palgrave, the indorsement on the cover (p. 279) having been made by him : we may, perhaps, presume that the other manuscript was also in his hands, but the indorsement upon it (p. 1) is obviously contemporaneous with the later portion of the contents. Both remained unnoticed until attention was directed to them in "The History of English Dramatic Poetry and the Stage," 8vo. 1831, Vol. I. p. 28. The Council of the Society of Antiquaries has recently, and in the most liberal manner, given permission that transcripts of them should be made under the care of the Editor, in order that they might be printed by the Roxburghe Club.

They may be said to form a sequel to the volume presented to the members by Mr. Botfield in 1841 ; for, although there is an interval in point of time and information which we have no means of supplying, they relate to the household expenses and other charges of the same nobleman as the family accounts printed by Mr. Botfield in the later portion of his contribution : those accounts extend, with some irregularities, from November 1462, to about the same season of the year 1469; while the manuscripts now under consideration apply chiefly to the period between the Spring of 1481 and the Autumn of 1483, comprising a very interesting and important portion of our history, regarding which not a few of our existing details are contradictory or imperfect. Hence one great source of the value of the manuscripts of which the body of the ensuing volume is composed, since they afford minute and authentic testimony regarding public events in which the Duke of Norfolk was personally and prominently concerned.

Towards the close of the present volume some information is given regarding the proceedings of the Earl of Oxford in raising troops for the service of Henry VII. in 1487; and the latest portion of the work consists of particulars of the domestic expenditure of the Earl of Surrey, son to the Duke of Norfolk the faithful adherent of Richard III. The Earl of Surrey, as is well known, was restored to that title 1489; and the accounts of his household commence in January 1490, and apply to the whole of that year.

The covers of the two manuscripts in question establish how much curious and interesting information of the same kind has been irretrievably lost, by the disregard in which such relics were formerly held. The earliest of the two is bound in parchment upon which nothing beyond the indorsement has been written, but it is lined by some pages of an original book of disbursements kept on paper by the Duke of Norfolk in his own handwriting. These entries, in particular, show the extreme attention which his Grace paid even to the most trifling matters relating to the daily expenses of his household. The following extracts, which are distinctly legible, detail what portion of the family provisions had been given out for consumption, and how much remained in store for future use: the year is wanting, but we may perhaps conjecture, that the items refer to a date before Sir John Howard was raised to the peerage.

“The Wednesday, xvij. day of november, in iij. honderd sprotes [sprats] iiij.d. ob. In heges [eggs] v.d.—In store ij. saltfes [saltfish] j. lenge, [ling] iij. heles, [eels] xxx. heges.

- "The throsday, xix. day of november, in j. pege [pig] iiij.d. — In store j. moton, ij. chekens, j. fesaunte.
- "The fryday, xx. day of november, in j. kode and halfe a flade, in hosteres [oysters] and moskeles ij.d., in heges vj.d. — In store halfe a lenge, j. saltefes, xx. heges.
- "The Saterdag xxj. day of november, in sperlynge ij.d. — In store half a lenge, j. saltefes, j. stokefes [stockfish] xxx. heges."

Other memoranda of the same description are legible, but they convey no farther information: the regular payments to the Steward (then a person of the name of Lelsey) in the month of February (the year is not given) are also duly registered by the Duke of Norfolk, but the sums have in every instance been cut or torn away.

The cover of the second manuscript is also of parchment, and the lining of it is of the same material; and here we have to regret still more the almost total destruction of the original record, which, however, was not kept by the Duke of Norfolk in English, but in Latin by some scribe employed by him. Only parts of it can be made out, in consequence of the destruction of the ink, and of the difficulty of separating the lining from the exterior, both having been strongly pasted together. It obviously relates to a time when Lord Howard was in South Wales, and resident, perhaps only for a short period, in Swansea Castle, where he was in communication with the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. It also seems that Lady Howard accompanied her husband, and the document, even in the state in which it has reached us, affords evidence of an expedition of which we have no previous information, as regards the nobleman to whose affairs the manuscripts relate. It must have occurred in the Autumn of 1479, as the date of September 19th Edw. IV. is once inserted. It is not easy to decypher part of these entries, but the following items may be quoted.

- "Item sol. Jankyn Bacham mundant. stablūm Domini infra Castrum per.
div. vices ij.d.
- "Item sol. Thom. M^d. et Jankyn Broke pro iiij. tabul. ab iisdem empt.

- " Item sol. Cro. apud Gwyllym Ewyn taylour facient. vij. togas, raparac. pro

- " Item in expens. Jankyn Cutter equit. versus Kermerden et ibid expect. pro

- " Et de denar. per ipsum solut. apud Bristowe pro c. libr. vesselamen. de vj.li. x.s. vj.d.

- " Solut. pro passag. ejus serviens Ducis Gloucestrie ad suos advent. apud Swynessey mensis Sep. A.º xix.º viij.d."

These memoranda do not follow each other, but are legible in different parts of the lining of the second manuscript.

The earliest manuscript, which is also most bulky in size, being a folio of two hundred and fifteen leaves, commences with two pages of tabular calculations, as to the cost of pay and victuals for various numbers of soldiers in succession : these it has not been thought necessary to transcribe, as they are not very intelligible, and convey no information that is not found in more detail in other parts of the volume. It then proceeds to some important historical matters, including a list of the ships (with their crews and the wages of the men) which attended Lord Howard on his voyage to Scotland after he had engaged with Edward IV., on the 23rd of February 1481, to be his " Lieutenant and Captain," with three thousand landmen and mariners under his orders. The terms of the "indenture" between the King and Lord Howard are recited in the manuscript, and to it are added the separate agreements between Lord Howard and Lord Cobham, Sir Harry Wentworth, and other inferior commanders. These particulars of naval preparation, mixed up with other matters of victualling and equipment, occupy nearly the first hundred pages of the following work ; and as we apprehend they are quite new in their kind, (at all events of so early a period) and serve to fix the dates of some interesting public events, we may rather rejoice that they are given with such minuteness, than that so large a space is filled by them. It need hardly be mentioned that this expedition against Scotland was headed by Richard, Duke of Gloucester, who had about twenty-three thousand men under his standard; and the accounts in question prove that the naval portion of the armament, consisting of fifteen ships, the names of which are inserted, departed from Harwich on the 20th of May 1481: we also learn that Lord Howard returned home on the 17th of August following, although his stipulated time of service did not expire until the 30th of that month. Without here entering into minor points, we may notice that on the 17th of June the fleet was off Scarborough; that on the 24th of the same month it was "afore Ynskyth;" that on the 3rd of July it was near Ynchcombe (we observe the ancient orthography of the names of places) where it remained until the 19th of July, if not longer, and returned to Harwich, the port from which it had set sail, on the 17th of August: at all events, as already stated, that seems to have been the day when Lord Howard landed, and arrived at his abode at Stoke.

During this interval Lady Howard, (Lord Howard's second wife, Margaret, daughter of Sir John Chedworth) after having taken leave of her husband at Harwich, seems to have resided constantly at the family seat in Suffolk; and it is to be remarked that the person who kept the book of household charges, when he made an entry on p. 98 of our volume, had not ascertained what sum Lady Howard had expended during the absence of the King's "Lieutenant and Captain" on the Scottish voyage.

As we have been hitherto entirely without materials for a biography of this celebrated nobleman at this period, and as the manuscripts before us in many respects amply supply the deficiency, it will not be uninteresting to advert to some of his personal proceedings, as they are there disclosed. It will be seen, as we advance, that those proceedings were more or less connected with important historical incidents.

Lord Howard appears to have gone to London, no doubt to have an interview with Edward IV. and to give an account of his voyage, very soon after his return from Scotland;¹ for we find him at his house at Stepney on the 29th of August (p. 103) and two days earlier he had given a reward to "the waits of London." He was at Stoke again in the beginning of September, and remained in the country superintending his domestic and agricultural affairs, in the latter of which he seems to have taken much interest, until the end of October, when he again visited the metropolis, (p. 126) and on this occasion, if not on the former, he was accompanied by Lady Howard. He continued in town, visiting the court at Greenwich, Windsor, &c. until the 28th of November, and registered in his own hand, (p. 138) the cost of certain presents of plate, &c. which he made to the Lord Chamberlain, to the Bishop of Ely, to the Lord Mayor, and to his "cousin Borow." Such gifts on his part were rare, and in what way these personages had entitled themselves to them can only be matter of conjecture, as nothing whatever is said of any obligations they had conferred: possibly, they had been instrumental in making pecuniary advances to Lord Howard preparatory to his voyage, but as his Lordship's book of receipts is not known to be extant, although sometimes referred to in the book of expenditure, we have no means of deciding the point. He spent Christmas at Colchester, of the castle of which town he had been made Constable in 1461: he returned to Stoke about the 10th of January, and on the 17th of that month he attended "the sessions" at Ipswich, and remained there three days.

He seems to have been very desirous of keeping on good terms with the Lord Chamberlain, for when Lord Howard came to London on the 31st of January he presented Lord Hastings with a pipe of wine; and a fortnight afterwards he gave the King's mother, "three yards and a half of white russet" that cost ten crowns and a half,¹ (p. 159). On the 15th of February he presented the Duke of Gloucester with eight cross-bows, seven of wood his life at Bordeaux, but at what date and for what purpose seems uncertain: it is hardly likely that it would have been so long ago as 1467, when he was appointed a commissioner for the arrangement of a peace with France. While at Bordeaux he had lent a sum of 33*s.* 4*d.* to a person of the name of Whitefoot, of Colchester, which was reckoned in account between them on the 26th of April.

and one of steel, and quitted London for Colchester on the next day. He spent but a few days at Colchester, because he was at Stoke by the 23rd of February. His movements were rapid for a period when travelling was so bad, slow, and inconvenient, and he was again in the metropolis on the 5th of March: at this date the court seems to have been at Eltham,¹ whither Lord Howard proceeded (p. 179); and it appears singular that he should have arrived so soon after the anniversary of the Coronation of Edward IV., and should not have been present at its celebration: the dates however in this part of the manuscript are somewhat confusedly inserted, and it is probable that Lord Howard was at Eltham on the 4th of March, although the entry for the payment of his "horse-meat" there bears date on the next day. He had left Lady Howard at Stoke, and remained absent from home an unusually long time, and it seems not unlikely that he made a voyage to France on some royal mission: at this date we find that he gave a reward to a person called Richard of Calais; but it should be added that we meet with his name in other parts of the accounts. Certain it is, that Lord Howard was at Dartford, Rochester, Sittingbourne, Canterbury and Dover at this period, perhaps on his way to Calais, though nothing is said of his having crossed the sea. He did not reach Stoke again until quite the close of April, or the beginning of May, so that his absence on this occasion was nearly of two months' duration.

What gives greater probability to the opinion that Lord Howard upon this occasion was in France is the fact, that on the 21st of April he paid £1. 16s. 8d. for "a grey nag to send to the French King" (p. 181); and under the same date we find him sending four shillings to Garter King at Arms for making out his Lordship's coat, and perhaps his style, which it was usual for those employed upon foreign embassies to present. It will be recollected that he had been similarly commissioned on two or three former occasions.

He did not long remain at Stoke, for after settling various accounts, particularly the expenditure of Lady Howard while he was away, he started again for London, having been summoned on the preceding day by a messenger from the King. (p. 189.) He travelled with unusual speed, as he reached London on the same day he quitted Stoke, although the journey commonly occupied two days. Lady Howard was again left in the country. Between the 13th and 16th of May we find in the accounts several charges for boat-hire to Westminster and Lambeth. On the 16th of May Lord Howard received twelve pounds as "his fee from the King's mother;" and from the mention of money paid by him at St. Helen's a few days afterwards, we may conclude that he visited the Duke of Gloucester at Crosby House: this was on the very day of his departure from the metropolis, 20th of May, and it may deserve remark that he had just previously sent one of his confidential servants, Thomas Seynclow, into Flanders. Lord Howard was at Colchester on the 22nd of May, and at Stoke two days afterwards. At this date he appears to have put on mourning: he paid a saddler for a saddle and harness covered with black, and his tailor for a black satin doublet, and a black cloth cloak.

Edward IV. was at Fotheringay at the close of May, and thither Lord Howard hastened on the last day of that month to join the royal party (p. 204.) The items, and other circumstances, make it certain that it was a sporting expedition,¹ and it continued for about a fortnight, Lord Howard having reached his home again on the 14th of June. On the 24th of June he gave two shillings to a person of the name of Posted "the Keeper of the King's lion," and on the 24th of June he sent a messenger to London; but he did not go thither himself until the 13th of July. The King was at this period at Dover (p. 216), and there Lord Howard joined him, possibly to assist with his advice respecting the repairs of the Castle, then in progress.² However, he was only a short time absent, for we find him returning by barge from Gravesend on the 21st of July. He merely passed through London, for on the next day he was at Chelmsford, and on the 24th of July at the house of his son, Sir Thomas Howard, and quitted it for Stoke on the 27th of July. We might infer, if we attended only to the contents of the first manuscript, that Lord Howard remained in the country superintending his harvesting and other agricultural employments until the middle of October, did we not learn from the second manuscript, that between the end of July and the middle of October he several times left home to attend the King, and for other purposes.

The first manuscript abruptly abandons the agricultural details, by which it had been occupied for many pages, on the 14th of October, 1482, and reverts to the subject with which it commenced, the agreement of Lord Howard with the King to do him service at sea with a stipulated number of ships and men, and upon certain conditions. The dates here refer back to the 20th Edw. IV.; and there is little doubt that at that period the beginning and end of the volume were used for these particulars, and the middle being left blank and not required for them, it was subsequently employed for the insertion of items of domestic expenditure. Some of the details respecting armour, pay, &c. at the conclusion of the first manuscript are not very intelligible; they are loosely and hastily written, and we may speculate that they were inserted very shortly before the sailing of the armament to Scotland. On p. 274 will be seen a copy of original instructions by the King to Lord Howard: these bear date 6th of July, 1481, and in them the Lord Admiral is directed "to keep the sea" near Leith, until the last day of August, but subsequent orders may have been sent out to him (of which there is however no trace in the manuscript) because it has been already shown that he reached home by about the middle of August.

The second manuscript, forming nearly the latter half of the ensuing volume, and consisting of 138 leaves, begins on the 22nd of August, in the 22nd Edward IV., 1482, and as the first manuscript has furnished us with various items in September and October of the same year, the two are to a certain extent concurrent; but they were kept by different scribes, and relate to different transactions. We shall now briefly follow up the biography of Lord Howard and his family, according to the materials supplied by the second manuscript.

On the first page of it we find, that on the 2nd of August, 1482, Lord Howard rode towards London, leaving Lady Howard at Stoke: he arrived on the 4th of August, and from various memoranda it is evident that at this date building to a considerable extent was going on at Stoke. On the 30th of August he bought two "aparaylls" (as they are termed) for chimneys, and a ton of "cane-stone" of the Prior of St. Mary Overy, in Southwark: about the same date Lady Howard at Stoke paid certain sums on account to "the brickman," to carters who brought timber, and to the carpenter for "the new building." Lord Howard returned home on the 9th of September, and seems to have taken Havering atte Bower (where, possibly, the Court then temporarily resided) in his way. The King was certainly at Walsingham in the middle of the month, and there he was joined by Lord Howard (p. 294.) who accompanied Edward IV. in a progress through some parts of the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk.

When he parted from the King, Lord Howard seems to have rejoined his Lady at Stoke; but he only remained there for a short time, as he again started for London, and reached it on the 27th of October. Under date of the 12th of November, (p. 312) we meet with an important, but not very intelligible entry of the payment of forty shillings "for having out the Great Seal for my Lord to Flanders, for the matter of the Duke of Austria," as if Lord Howard had been employed under the authority of a royal commission to make a journey into Flanders upon affairs connected with the Duke of Austria: perhaps this was subsequent to his return, for three days afterwards he repaired to Stoke, where he spent Christmas: early in January he had an entertainment in his mansion, known at that date by the name of "a disguising," which seems to have consisted of dumb show and dancing in masquerade. Some of the particulars of the cost are inserted in the manuscript, (p. 339) and they form a very curious assemblage of items for the purpose: we know of no similar account of so early a date, especially relating to a "disguising" in the private dwelling of a nobleman, and the details of court revels at this period are so scanty and deficient, that these memoranda are the more valuable.

Lord Howard was present at the election of the Knights of the Shire at Ipswich early in January (the day is not mentioned); but it does not appear that he contributed any part of the expenses, beyond the cost of his own personal accommodation (p. 343.) and that of the ten horsemen who attended him. The bill upon this occasion forms, in many respects, a contrast to that in Mr. Botfield's volume (p. 398.) when Lord Howard, then Sir John Howard, was chosen one of the representatives for the county of Suffolk, his colleague being a gentleman of the name of Thomas Brewse. The Knights elected in January, 22 Edw. IV. are not named, but Lord Howard was certainly not one of them, as at that date he had been raised to the peerage. On the 19th of January he proceeded to London to attend the Parliament, (p. 346) and had more than thirty horsemen in his retinue, whose expenses he of course defrayed. The sitting was not of long duration, as he took his departure again on the 22nd of February, and on the 25th of that month was at Colchester "to keep the sessions," and was at home by the 1st of March: five days afterwards, for some unexplained reason, another sessions was kept at Colchester, at which Lord Howard was also present.

On the 4th of April, 1483, Lord Howard received a letter from the King by a royal messenger (p. 378) and, probably in consequence of it, went to London three days afterwards, where he arrived on the 9th of April, the very day of the decease of Edward IV. Stow makes it doubtful whether the sudden death of the King were owing to "melancholy and anger" at the double dealing of the French King in the marriage of the Dauphin with the Princess Elizabeth, or to a surfeit "to the which Edward IV. was greatly given;" and he tells us, that Lord Howard had lately returned from France with the news of the marriage between the Dauphin and Margaret of Austria; but we meet with no trace of such a journey in these accounts, nor is anything said of the demise of the crown. Henceforward the proceedings of Lord Howard, in connexion with public affairs, will evidently become more important, and we shall therefore trace them in the manuscript before us with greater minuteness.

After having dispatched a letter to Stoke (probably to Lady Howard who had been left there) on the 11th of April, Lord Howard dined with the Lord Chamberlain, for on that day he gave the cooks a reward. On the 14th of April he received a letter from his son, Sir Thomas Howard, and on the 15th another from Stoke, no doubt, in reply to that he had sent four days before. On the 17th of April he bought a quantity of black cloth for mourning, and on the 19th he went to Windsor, but he was in London again on the 21st of April. Lady Howard must have come to town in the interval between the 21st of April and the 1st of May; and on the 9th of May Lord Howard seems to have divested himself of a considerable part of his retinue, having sent away twenty-six men of Hadleigh and Stoke, and twelve men of Neyland and Chelmsford, who had accompanied him to the metropolis. Under date of the 15th of May, 1 Edward V., we meet with a remarkable entry, proving in what way Lord Howard endeavoured to ingratiate himself with the Protector, for he presented him with a gold cup and cover, weighing no less than 65 ounces. This memorandum is twice inserted in the manuscript on following pages, (p. 391 and 392 of our impression) for having been first made in one place, it was for some unexplained reason erased there, and added afterwards: the precise value of the gift is not stated in either instance, nor is any hint given on what account it was presented. It may, possibly, not be too much to infer from this circumstance, that other members of the aristocracy sought in a similar manner to pay their court to the most influential, if not the highest, authority in the realm. On the 17th of May, two days after he had made his present, Lord Howard received "a writ for the Parliament" about to be assembled, and on the 18th of May he paid six shillings and eight pence "for his letters patent for the Duchy." This entry, perhaps, does not relate to his own dukedom, which was not conferred until more than a month afterwards, but to some grant in connection with the Duchies of Lancaster or Cornwall, consequent perhaps upon the gift of the cup of gold only three days before: it is not unlikely, however, that the gift of the cup of gold followed the grant, and was intended as a complimentary return for it.

As Constable of the Tower, (an office to which he succeeded in 1482, the reversion having been conceded to him in 1477) it would be the duty of Lord Howard to superintend the preparations for receiving the young Princes there; and under the date of the 21st of May (p. 394) we meet with several notices of money paid for repairs, and especially "for making of three beds:" possibly, one of these was the very bed in which the young Princes were subsequently smothered, (if indeed such were their fate) and the mention of two sacks of lime, in immediate connection with the memoranda regarding the beds, may appear somewhat remarkable.

On the 27th of May a privy seal was sent to Lord Howard, but nothing is said of the nature or object of it: on the same day he dispatched a messenger to his son, Sir Thomas, and on the 2nd of June one of his own servants went "to fetch Lord Cobham," while Lord Howard paid a visit by water to Lord Lisle. On the 5th of June the Protector made Lady Howard a present of "a box of wafers," and on the next day a sum was paid for her "standing in Cheap," or Cheapside, (p. 399) no doubt to view the procession in the City, after what Sir Thomas More calls "the mock-election" of Richard III. About this date Lord Howard seems to have taken some steps for the more permanent residence of his family in the metropolis, and various items are inserted in the manuscript, under date of the 11th of June, for rather extensive repairs to his lordship's "place in London." It may deserve notice, that Lady Howard appears to have directed the expenditure.

Sir Thomas More informs us, that the day after his mock election Richard III. went to Westminster, sat himself down in the Court of King's Bench, and made a very gracious speech to the assembly there present: the manuscript shows (p. 402) that on the 16th of June Lord Howard employed no fewer than eight boats to carry him to and from Westminster. Although the expense of the boats was paid on the 16th of June, they may in fact have been hired and used on the day Richard III. went to Westminster, and took his seat in the Court of King's Bench. Presents, especially of venison, seem now to have flowed in upon Lord Howard: he was on the point of being advanced to the dukedom of Norfolk, and his influence with the new King must have been well known: hence, probably, the gifts of bucks from Lords Audeley, Cobham and others, who were naturally anxious to stand well in his favour.

Lord Howard was created Duke of Norfolk and Earl Marshal of England on the 28th of June, and on the 1st of July the Duchess of Norfolk (called "my lady's grace" in the manuscript, p. 406) paid three pounds for "my Lord's letters patent of the dukedom," and eighteen shillings and three pence for what is called "the sealship" of them.¹ No doubt, an entertainment was given upon the occasion, for, including four pounds to the Cator, £8. 4s. 3d. were spent in household expenses, although the sum laid out daily, in provisions &c. for the family, had usually been much smaller, sometimes not exceeding about as many shillings. It is needless here to enter into particulars upon the subject, but the manuscript proves, as might be expected, that after the elevation of Lord Howard to the Dukedom of Norfolk the charges of his household were much augmented. On the 1st of July a large quantity of blue, red, and tawney cloth was purchased for the new liveries (p. 412) and the Duke had already given forty shillings to two joiners "in part payment for his tipped staves."

There are several memoranda, under date of the 19th of July, relating to the Coronation of Richard III., but the particular day of that event is not stated: boats were paid for on "the Saturday before the Coronation," as well as on "the Sunday following," and for the Duchess "when she came down from the Coronation." Three boats were hired when the Duke of Norfolk paid two visits to the Duke of Buckingham; and the former, on the Saturday after the Coronation, accompanied the King to Windsor, the expenses of his retinue being separately inserted. It is clear that the Duke remained there over Tuesday, but the precise dates are not always found in this part of the manuscript: he was certainly in London on the 24th of July, and Giles Seynclow, the writer of this part of the account-book (p. 416) paid the Duke's offering to St. Anne, "when he went to Crosby-place." The Duke was there again on 1st of August (p. 419), and from some other memoranda respecting the keeping of the gardens, the construction of a "siege," or seat, probably in the gardens, the provision of a quantity of straw, and other charges, it seems likely that Crosby-place at this date had been left in the care of some of the Duke of Norfolk's immediate dependents.

Sir Thomas Howard was created Earl of Surrey on the same day that his father was elevated to the Dukedom of Norfolk, but we do not hear of him by that title until 7th of August, (p. 420) when the Duke sent a letter to "my Lord of Surrey, his son." Whither it was addressed we are not told, but had Lord Surrey been in London, perhaps, a separate charge for it (though the sum seems to have been accidentally omitted) would not have been made, nor the messenger, John Ory, particularly named. The Duke of Norfolk had been elected a Knight of the Garter in 1472, two years after he was created Lord Howard; but when he became Duke of Norfolk his Garter seems to have required alteration or repair, and we therefore read (p. 422) some entries regarding it, as well as for his signet ring, and for "a harness of gold for his sword:" on the same day, he bought nine pieces of hangings, ornamented with lions, the family crest. Having settled for many heavy expenses incurred during his stay in London, the Duke took his departure for Stoke Neyland on the 11th of August (p. 423); but under the same date is inserted a memorandum respecting the purchase of "leger harness," from a Flemish armourer. The Duke was at Colchester on the 13th of August, and here we find mention, for the first time, of his Secretary, (p. 428) an officer he appears to have appointed upon his creation as Duke of Norfolk. We may judge of the port and state he assumed at this period, from the fact that he was attended by more than 130 horsemen, for whose provisions he paid at Brentwood, Chelmsford, Colchester, &c.

From several items on p. 430 it is indisputable that the Duke went into mourning about this date ; but whether it was occasioned by the deaths of the Princes in the Tower, we have no means of deciding from the document before us : on the 29th August he reckoned with his tailor for the cost of his change of apparel, &c. He had previously undertaken a sort of progress through the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex, and the charges of himself and his numerous followers are minutely registered. One of the most curious memorials of this kind is the bill of the Prior of Thetford, (p. 434) showing precisely the articles the Duke had been required to pay for, and those which the brotherhood had gratuitously contributed. At Bury St. Edmunds the Duke and part of his train appear to have been accommodated within the walls of the Abbey, but he was nevertheless charged for a portion of the expenditure. He returned to Stoke by the 1st of September, and from thence came to London, accompanied by the Duchess and one of his daughters : on the 12th of September he started on an expedition into Surrey and Sussex (p. 443) leaving the Duchess in London, but he had returned some days before the end of the month : on the 26th of September he dispatched a falconer to Windsor, but on what errand is not stated, possibly with a present of hawks : it might be connected with a license (p. 465) for the importation of 100 tons of wine, the fees for which were discharged on the 2d of October. At this date the Duke was in the payment of wages to 65 male servants (p. 468) ; but the sums given quarterly or monthly to the female domestics, with few exceptions, are not recorded in the manuscript : their wages seem generally to have gone through the hands of the Duchess.

After the 11th of October there appears to have been an unusual muster of persons in the retinue and interest of the Duke of Norfolk at Gravesend ; and at earlier dates we have had messengers several times sent into Kent : perhaps on this occasion the assemblage of persons at Gravesend was connected with Lord Cobham, to whom the Duke sent £20 ;¹ or it might relate in some way to the discharge of the duties of the Duke of Norfolk as Lord Admiral. On the 11th of October, besides many individuals specially and separately named, Sir John Middleton with thirty men, and Sir John Norbury with forty men, repaired thither, by order and at the charge of the

Duke (p. 471): he, however, probably remained in London, for on the 15th of October, in company with "Clifford of Kent," he went by water to the Lord Chancellor, and on the same day he dispatched a messenger to the King's mother. We gather, from entries on p. 474 and some subsequent pages, that in the middle of October the Duke of Norfolk was busily engaged in collecting men, horses, arms and armour for the service of the King, and many details of the kind, certainly not complete and sometimes not easily understood, are given in a handwriting not found in any other part of the manuscript, and with the date, 26th Feb. 1 Rich. III. In several instances the scribe does not seem to have been familiar with the names of places he enumerates, but we have printed them as he has written them.

The particulars of household expenses in the family of the Duke of Norfolk terminate with the 20th of October, 1483; and if they were continued in any other book of the kind, the existence of it is not now known. It is very possible that the unsettled state of public affairs interfered in some degree with the regularity with which the family accounts had been previously kept. The Duke of Norfolk, prior to the 26th of February 1484, had "made an indenture" with the King to furnish him with one thousand men, and the latter part of the manuscript professes to supply the names of the whole body. It is not stated by what date they were to be ready to take the field, but there can be no doubt that they were the same troops which, with additions, the Duke of Norfolk led to the Battle of Bosworth, where he lost his life. The thousand men consisted of the tenants and adherents of the Duke, and the details show in what way each person of any rank or influence under him supplied their proportions, and how particular towns, where the Duke had power or property, came forward with men and money to add to the total number. Such is the summary of the leading particulars relating to the personal proceedings of John Lord Howard, subsequently Duke of Norfolk.

There is a hiatus in the MS. between the 26th of February 1484 and the 21st of June 1487. In this interval Bosworth Field had been won, and Henry VII. had been nearly two years on the throne. On p. 501 will be found a Commission of Array in Latin, with accompanying instructions in English, addressed to the Earl of Oxford, dated from Lincoln the 21st of June, 2nd Henry VII. of which none of our historians take notice. This Earl of Oxford was of course John de Vere, who had been attainted in 1474, but who had been restored to his forfeited honours by Henry VII. as soon as he came to the crown. According to our Chroniclers, the Earl of Oxford and the Duke of Bedford were "chief captains" against the Earl of Lincoln, Lord Lovell, Martin Swart, &c. when they landed in rebellion on the coast of Lancashire, and marching to Newark were there signally defeated: it was under the authority of the Commission of the 21st of June, 2nd Henry VII. that the Earl of Oxford proceeded to collect a force "to await upon my Lord in the north country, appointed to be ready at Cambridge by the 18th of July, Anno 2 R. Henrici VII.^{mi}" The details of this muster appear to be complete, as to persons, places and amounts, but it is not easy to make out from them the precise number of men the Earl of Oxford was to provide. The Commission of Array for the purpose is now for the first time brought to light and printed.

Another interval of time occurs between the above, which may be considered the second portion of the later manuscript included in our volume, and the third division, which refers to the household expenses of the Earl of Surrey, formerly Sir Thomas Howard, and eldest, if not only, son to the Duke of Norfolk. He had been attainted in 1485 for his adherence to Richard III. and was not restored to the earldom of Surrey until 1489, nor created Duke of Norfolk until 1514. His family accounts, which close the present volume and conclude the manuscript, are for an entire year, commencing in January 1490, and ending in January 1491. These memoranda are merely of a domestic nature, relating to the expenses of housekeeping, the wages of servants, (especially falconers, for the Earl seems to have been much devoted to hawking) rewards to the bringers of presents, and other matters of the like kind; but during the whole year to which the items refer we do not find by them that the Earl of Surrey visited London, or was with the King at any time when making a progress in the country. Considering that he had been restored to his earldom in the preceding year, this circumstance may be deemed extraordinary, but it is very possible that such items of charge were registered in some unrecovered book.

Having thus explained the contents and character of both the manuscript volumes printed in the ensuing pages, we will now advert briefly to some particular points of family history, domestic life, and early manners which they illustrate.

On this authority we hear of various members of the Howard family, regarding whom we know of no other extant source of information, as well as of individuals nearly related, whose connexion has been well understood, but respecting whom we have been without any details. Among the last may be mentioned Lord Berners,¹ one of the very earliest of our literary nobility, the translator of Froisart's Chronicles, (the first volume of which was printed by Pynson in 1523, and the second in 1525) and the compiler, author, or translator of several other works. It is evident that during the period to which these manuscripts relate he resided under Lord Howard's roof, having married Catherine, the daughter of Lord Howard by his second wife. Lord Berners is supposed to have been born in 1467, and succeeded his grandfather in the title in 1474: he is first mentioned in these accounts in the spring of 1482, when, according to most authorities, he was only in his fifteenth year; and as Lady Berners is spoken of at the same time, it is clear, either that the marriage between them must have been celebrated at a very early age, or that there has been some mistake as to the date of the birth of Lord Berners. Lady Berners must have been younger than her husband, for Lord Howard was not married to her mother until 1467. They seem to have been treated somewhat like children in the family, and on p. 152 is an entry of money paid for "looking to my Lady Berners;" and on p. 164 it is recorded that a person called Peter was paid three shillings and four pence for "looking to my Lord Berners." If "looking to" merely mean attending upon, it seems rather an unusual form of expression. Lady Berners appears to have been ill in February, 1482, and an apothecary was paid for medicines for her cure; and we repeatedly meet with items for clothes of nearly every description, and of comparatively small sums presented to them, as if for pocket-money. Lord Berners had horses found for him: his "nag" is mentioned on p. 355, and "Bayard Berners," probably an animal of a more showy description, is introduced on the next page. At this date Lord Berners was in London with his father-in-law, who was attending in his place in Parliament, but in general he seems to have resided in the country. Both he and Lady Berners were in the metropolis during the important period of the assumption of the royal dignity by Richard III.

Lord Howard's "son Tymperley" is spoken of on p. 114, and Mrs. Tymperley and Mrs. Anne Tymperley in several places: the fact, no doubt, is, that his daughter Anne, by his first wife, had married a gentleman of that name: on p. 440 she is called "Lady Tymperley," her father having at that time been elevated to the dukedom of Norfolk. On p. 129 we meet with the mention of Lord Howard's "daughter-in-law;" but the scribe probably there meant another daughter of Lord Howard, who had married a Mr. Radmyld, whose name frequently occurs as a sender of presents and in other ways, and who in November 1481 seems to have commenced house-keeping: the various gifts made, as may be conjectured, to Mrs. Radmyld and her husband on this occasion, even to a frying pan and a ladle, are duly registered on p. 129. Under date of the 15th of December 1481 we hear of Lord Howard's "daughter Mortimer;" and on p. 209 he himself enters a sum of money placed in the hands of "my daughter Norris:" these were his two other daughters, for he had four by his first wife, viz. Anne, Isabel, Jane, and Margaret, and they must have been the persons intended by "my lady's daughters" (properly, my late lady's daughters) when gowns were given to them on p. 417. Lord Howard's "nephew Neville" and his "nephew Daniel" are noticed in different parts of our volume. Various memoranda relate to Master George and his nurse, to Master George and his horses, to Master George's chamber, and it is by no means clear that the same person is always intended; but the reader will be particularly struck by the repeated occurrence of the name of Totsayn, or Tutsayn, who appears to have been constantly about the person of Lord Howard, whether in London or in the country, in some unexplained capacity. He was probably a favourite page, who is also called "Totsayn, the child;" and in one place (p. 430) he is provided with a livery gown, but elsewhere he has a doublet of white and green¹ and on p. 410 he is furnished with a pair of spurs.

It is not easy to gather from these sources of what the household of Lord Howard at any particular period consisted; but, as already remarked, after he became Duke of Norfolk his establishment was vastly increased, and was therefore much more expensive. While Lord Howard, he had two priests, or Chaplains, who received regular salaries, and we now and then hear of others, who seem to have performed mass in the family chapel, or elsewhere. His lordship's Auditor at one time was Watkin Fulbone, and subsequently John Knight; and his Steward, for the greater part of the period to which the manuscripts apply, was a person of the name of Bliant, often found inserted in his lordship's handwriting in the margin of the books: this individual subsequently became Comptroller of the household. For a considerable time the Cator of the family was Richard Wolman; and throughout the whole of it a person of the name of Wood filled the office of Treasurer: he must have been a man of some consequence and family, for, besides other indications of wealth which will be observed in the course of our volume, he had a minstrel in his own pay and livery, who was rewarded by Lady Howard and others. We have already stated that, after Lord Howard was elevated to 35 ¹ p. 77. The Rev. Mr. Dyce in his account of Skelton, Works, I. xii., supposes that the dress of white and green worn by that poet, (so to call a coarse and offensive rhymist) and alluded to by him in the following lines against Garnish, was peculiar at that time to a poet-laureat, and was in fact the King's livery:—

"Your sworde, ye swere, I wene,
So tranchant and so kene,
Xall kyt both wyght and grene:
Your foly ys to grett
The kynges colours to threte"

It is clear, from our manuscript and various authorities, that other persons wore "white and green" besides poets laureat. There is some reason for believing that Skelton, who was probably a Norfolk man, was at one time in the service of the Duke: the name of John Skelton occurs several times in these accounts.

the Dukedom, he employed "a secretary," an officer of whom we do not until then hear, and whose name is never introduced. The names of Nicholas and Oliver of the buttry, of Gauge, clerk of the kitchen, of Laurence groom of the hall, &c. will frequently be met with in the ensuing pages, together with a foreigner (probably a Spaniard) called Diago, but what were his duties is nowhere mentioned. Among the dependants of Lord Howard, and forming part of his domestic establishment, were two fools, but whether natural idiots or professed jesters under the assumption of folly, we have no means of deciding: one of them called Tom, and "Tom fool," occurs often in the accounts, with items for the cost of his pipe, his coats, his hose, his shoes, &c.: the other fool was called Richard, and as far as we can judge, he was of a lower grade in the family, being sometimes spoken of as "the fool of the kitchen." It seems not unlikely, that one fool was allowed to mix among the distinguished guests and members of the family, while the other was retained for the amusement of the domestics.¹ We are not aware of any other record which shows that two fools formed part of the establishment of a nobleman of that day, although one fool was retained in many ancient families.

A prominent feature in the following household books is the great variety of entries in connection with music and musical performers. Lord Howard entertained professed singers, and players upon instruments, as members of his establishment. Nicholas Stapyton, William Lyndsey, and "little Richard," as he was called, were paid regular wages as singers;² and to these are to be added the children of his Lordship's chapel, four, five, and six in number at different dates, all provided with food and clothing, besides being paid for their services. There seem to have been organs in the mansion at Stoke Neyland, as well as in the chapel, and several memoranda relate to the purchase of music: by p. 158 it appears that three shillings and four pence was given for "a prick-song book;" and farther on we meet with entries of money paid for "a mass of pricked song" and "an anthem" for the chapel: on p. 161 is an item of fourteen shillings and four pence to "Gorum, master of the children of St. Anthony," for "a song-book and four anthems."¹ Perhaps Lady Howard performed on the lute, and on p. 218 a minstrel is paid for repairing one. On all occasions musicians of every description were liberally rewarded, and among them we hear (p. 122) of the Duke of Gloucester's minstrels, and of the same nobleman's "Shalms," (probably a different company); of the minstrels of "my Lord Makes" (p. 216); and of those of the Earl of Kent (p. 449), besides minstrels attached to private individuals, and such as belonged to particular towns. The payments to harpers and others, who were required to play before Lord Howard on his different journies, are frequent, and from a memorandum on p. 149 we are led to believe that he kept a harper continually in his service, and provided him with a grey gown. On the 18th of October 1481, his Lordship entered into an agreement with William Wastell, harper of London, that he should teach a boy named Colet "to harp and to sing," probably, in order that he might be competent afterwards to fill the post of one of the family musicians.

² Both Lyndsey and "little Richard" (the last seems to have been originally one of the children of Lord Howard's chapel) were, however, sometimes employed as confidential messengers, when any letter or information of importance was to be conveyed.

These manuscripts also contain the earliest notice, yet discovered, of the fact that members of the aristocracy kept associations of players in their pay, a practice which became so common afterwards, and was so much abused by itinerant companies, that it was found necessary to check it by positive enactment. It has been hitherto supposed, on the authority of the second of the two manuscripts, that Richard III., when Duke of Gloucester, was the first nobleman who ever gave his countenance to a body of actors, travelling round the country under the sanction of his name :¹ the fact, however, is that although a liberal encourager and patron (as far as we have the means of judging) of music and the stage, he can only be looked upon, in this respect, as following the example of another nobleman—the Earl of Essex. It appears by an entry on p. 149, that the “Earl of Essex’s men, players” performed before Lord Howard at Christmas 1481-2, while the Duke of Gloucester’s “four players” were rewarded at the same season of the following year (p. 336). Thus it is clear, as far as any evidence yet discovered goes, that Henry Bouchier, Earl of Essex, is entitled to be considered the first English nobleman who had a company of theatrical servants in his pay and under his patronage. Although it was afterwards found necessary to controul this custom, there can be no doubt that it most importantly contributed to the prosperity and success of our national drama in its infancy, and it is impossible to decide what beneficial effect it may not have had upon the condition of our stage even at the period when it reached its manhood and perfection, at the close of the reign of Elizabeth, and in the beginning of that of her successor.

At a much more remote date associations of actors, generally composed of persons engaged in particular trades, whether incorporated or otherwise, were attached to cities, boroughs and towns; and in the records before us we meet with mention of those of Thoryngton Street, or Turton Street, as the place is there called (p. 104) of Coggeshall (pp. 146, 336) of Hadleigh (p. 147) of Esterford (p. 148) of Chelmsford (p. 517) and of Lavenham (p. 519). A memorandum on p. 202, connected with this subject, is somewhat curious as affording proof that a drama (no doubt scriptural) was performed in a church at Colchester on Whit-monday; but we are aware from other authorities that it was not a very unusual practice: the same was perhaps the case when “the Resurrection” was represented before Lord Howard on “Easter-day,” but the information is not as precise as in the former instance. On p. 517 a notice occurs of what is there called “a panget,” meaning doubtless a pageant, which might or might not be a miracle-play, or a morality, represented in the streets or in some open space: the date is considerably posterior to the death of the Duke of Norfolk, and the reward on the occasion seems to have been given by his son. To the "disguising" in the private dwelling of Lord Howard, in January 1482-3, we have already adverted, but we allude to it again here, because this species of entertainment had something dramatic in its character, and led the way to the Masques, accompanied by dialogue and music, which at a period not very long subsequent formed so important a part of the amusements of the court. In the early instance under consideration the materials for the disguising were bought from a tradesman at Sudbury, who probably procured them from London, as they were hardly of a kind to be obtained in a country town. Considerably later in the manuscript we have charges for the purchase of "linen for disguising" (p. 515) and of "stuff for disguisers" (p. 517); but this was in the time of the Earl of Surrey, and no such curious particulars of the commodities are supplied as in the former case.

The private charities of Lord Howard and his family seem to have been both general and extensive; and if all the small amounts thus applied were extracted from the two manuscripts they would be found to form a very considerable sum: few pages occur in which alms are not recorded, apparently as a necessary part of the household expenditure. In London or in the country, on journies or at the residences of his friends, Lord Howard was always bountiful to the poor; and in looking at the items we must, of course, not forget the great difference in the value of money at that period and in our own day. When an ox could be bought for twenty shillings, a quarter of wheat for six shillings and eight pence, and a load of hay for five shillings and four pence, a single penny was no trifling present to a beggar, and the gift was frequently much larger:¹ besides, it will be seen that whenever any of the domestic servants were employed to go a distance, upon business, or with letters and messages, they were invariably allowed to be liberal of their master's money to those who stood in need of it, and duly charged it in their accounts. One source of expense of this description will sound rather strangely to modern ears, not recollecting sufficiently the changes in the state of society which have since occurred: we refer to the gifts of money to "hermits" and "gentlemen hermits," persons who, perhaps, became voluntary recluses, and, as far as we know, lived upon charity. Charges of this kind will be observed on pp. 176, 199, 222 and 367.

It is unnecessary to enter into farther particulars upon this point, but there is one circumstance, illustrating the pecuniary generosity of Lord Howard, which appears to deserve especial remark. As far as we can judge, he was not himself a man of any literary pretensions; but we have already noticed the undoubted claims of this kind possessed by his son-in-law, Lord Berners, who may have had considerable influence upon the mind of Lord Howard, and may have induced him to expend no trifling amounts upon the education of youths at Cambridge, then to be looked upon rather in the light of a school than of an University. The brief and imperfect wording of the memoranda does not enable us to speak decisively upon the question, but it seems to have been Lord Howard's custom to allow the parents of several boys to pay a part of the cost of education, and to contribute the rest himself. In some cases he seems to have furnished the whole sum required, and possibly the youths were of extremely promising abilities, and their friends little able to make them any allowance or exhibition. This most beneficial and enlightened liberality may have been the spontaneous offspring of Lord Howard's own mind; and on no occasion does he seem to have required prompting, when good was to be accomplished by a pecuniary sacrifice. He was evidently a careful man, watchful of his domestic expenditure, and exact in his receipts and payments, especially before he became Duke of Norfolk; but from beginning to the end of the manuscripts in our hands there is not the remotest trace of anything like ignoble parsimony. He was bountiful to his relatives and immediate dependants, and the proofs of his disinterested benevolence to mere strangers are too numerous to be separately distinguished. Some particulars of his liberality to youths in a course of instruction at Cambridge will be observed upon pp. 147, 300, 338, 341, 371, 379, 468, &c. In some instances the names of the parties are inserted, and in others they are omitted, but at all times Lord Howard was unostentatious of his charities.

In Mr. Botfield's volume mention is made (p. xcii) of an "Yenglyshe boke, calyd Dives et Pauper," which no doubt was a manuscript of the work printed by Pynson in 1493, and by Wynkyn de Worde in 1496. On p. 277 of the present volume will be seen a very curious list of books, in all probability belonging to Lord Howard; and which, as it immediately follows a variety of details respecting furniture and apparel taken with him on his voyage to Scotland, we may possibly consider an inventory of the library he had selected for his amusement on board his ship. It will be remarked that the titles are all French, a language with which it is unquestionable his Lordship was well acquainted, and some of the books may have been in a printed form, having been issued from continental presses before 1480; but others were certainly in manuscript, and perhaps such was the state of the whole collection. Nothing is mentioned by the writer of the list to lead to an opinion one way or the other, as will be seen on reference to p. 277, where it is given precisely as it stands in the original. The titles are there corrupted or abridged, and for the sake of greater intelligibility, we here subjoin them, as we apprehend, correctly, and shall follow them by a few brief remarks upon each production.

The first of these fourteen works was, no doubt, the old French dramatic performance on the siege and sacking of Troy, entitled "La Destruction de Troye le grant, mise par Personnaiges," which was printed at Paris in 1484 by Jehan Bonhomme, and went through several subsequent editions. The next is the well known production of Raoul le Fevre, printed in French by Caxton before 1470, and of which an English translation came from his press "in the holy cyte of Colen" in 1471, under the title of "The Recuyell of the Historyes of Troye." "L'Arbre des Batailles" was written by Honoré Bonnor, or Bonhor, and printed, according to M. Van Praet, at Lyons in 1477, and subsequently in 1481. We can only conjecture that "Ponthus et la belle Sidoyne" is intended by "Pontius," as the title stands in the manuscript; and certainly no other work is known for which it can well be intended: "le tres excellent Romant du noble chevaleureux Roy Ponthus, et de la tres belle Sidoyne, fille du Roy de Bretagne" was not printed, says Brunet, until an edition was brought out at Lyons by Caspar Ortuin about the year 1500. The fifth book in the preceding list was published at Lyons about 1473, under the title of "Cy commence le livre de Baudoyne conte de Flandres, et de Ferrant fils au roy de Portingal," and it was several times reprinted. It is possible that "La Belle Dame sans Merci" was the translation, falsely imputed to Chaucer, from the French of Alain Chartier; but it was more probably the original poem, then in manuscript, but afterwards several times printed, and extremely popular: "the legende off Lad . . . saunce mercy" is spoken of in the Paston Letters, Vol. I. p. 300, as among the books of that family.¹ "Les Accusations de la Dame," which comes seventh in the list, was doubtless connected in subject, but could hardly be the poem known in French by the name of "La belle Dame qui eut Merci," obviously a sequel to "La belle Dame sans Merci." Olivier de la Marche wrote a book (printed without date or place) called "Une excellent et tres proufitable livre pour tout Creature humaine, appelé le Meroer de Mort," and this is what was intended by the manuscript, where it mentions "Le Myror delamort," or "Le Miroir de la Mort." The original of "Le Jeu des Echecs" was probably the same as the original of Caxton's "Game and Playe of the Chesse," printed in 1474, viz. the Latin work of Jacobus Thessolonia, or Cessol, which at an early date was translated into French by Jehan de Vignay: there was, however, another early version by Ferron, and this may have been the work in the possession of Lord Howard: it does not appear that de Vignay's translation was printed, until it came out in Paris in 1504. "Le Jeu des Dés" must have been a production of a similar kind, applicable to dice. Of "Le Debat de la Demoiselle et bon Freres" we can only say that several small works in verse with the title of "Debat" were printed late in the fifteenth, or early in the sixteenth centuries, such as "Le Debat de deux Demoiselles, l'une nommée le noyre, et l'autre la tannée," and "Le Debat de la Demoiselle et de la bourgeoise;" but we find among them no such title as is given in the manuscript. "L'Amant rendu Cordelier," was the tale, printed at Paris in 1490 by Germain Vincant, with the title of "L'Amant rendu Cordelier à l'observance d'amours." "Les Dits des Sages" was unquestionably the original of Lord Rivers's "Dictes and Sayings of Philosophres," printed by Caxton in 1477, and which had been printed more than once in France, without date or place, but in all probability before it came from the press of our earliest typographer. The romance of "Paris and the Fair Vienne" is well known from the many times it was printed at home and abroad, first perhaps by Caxton in 1485, for the earliest foreign copy seems to have been issued by Gerard Leeu from his press at Antwerp in 1487. The two last works are entered in a different, and perhaps a somewhat later hand-writing, and we may doubt if they formed part of the original collection of volumes in the possession of Lord Howard.

It only remains to be stated, that such portions of the two manuscripts printed in this volume as are in the hand-writing of Lord Howard, with the exception of a few names duly pointed out in the notes, are distinguished by Italic type.

¹ So spelt in the MS. It is probably not a title, but the word "before" mis-spelt. It might be a present to Lady Berners, whose name is omitted.

² After the word "kepyng" in this entry, Lord Howard interlined the words "lytel Berweke." Hence it appears that he paid for more than one child at Cambridge: one has been previously mentioned.

And he hath had of my Lady, whil my Lord was on the see xl.s.

Summa iij.li.

Couper } The v.th day of Januare, my Lord toke John Couper of

The technical terms here used were no doubt well understood at the time. Of course the entry refers to certain stained-glass windows Lord Howard was providing, perhaps, for the chapel, upon building which his carpenter, &c. had been engaged.

The same day, my Lord paid Archer for xxxvj. chares viij.li. xv.s.

And v.s. that rested in his handes.

Kynderby.

The same day, my Lord paid him xxvij. chares vj.li. xv.s.

¹ Here the MS. contains some farther details respecting the voyage to Scotland, with which it begins. It will be observed that the particulars vary as to dates, and some other smaller matters, into which it is not necessary to enter, but which will be evident on a comparison with the contents of the earlier part of the present volume. With reference of this memorandum, see p. 9.

² Probably we ought to read viij.^{xx} and not viij^x, each mariner having been provided with a jacket.

THE LORD COBHAM.¹

The xx.th yere of the rayne of the king Edward the iiij.th, John Lord Cobham endented with the Lord Howard, the xxv. day of April, to do the king servisse in the Lord Howardes retenue, now in the viage upon the see agenst the Scotcs, with xj.^{xx} men wel armed and harnessed; that is v.^{xx} and xv. lande men, and v.^{xx} and xv. maryners, and to serve xv. wekkes. Wherupon he received be the handes of Fitzherberd for vitels of xvj. wekkes

c. iiij.^{xx} iij.li. vj.s. viij.d.

After xij.d. ob. a wek for a man.

And he received for viij. wekkes wages of v.^{xx} xv. lande men lvij.li. x.s.

And for prest of v.^{xx} v. maryners x.li. x.s.

Summa ij.^c lj.li. vj.s. viij.d.

The which he received of Fiztherberd.

The vij.th day of April, xxj. yere of the king, my Lord toke him vij.^{xx} xij.li. So he is all paid for xvj. wekkes for xj.^{xx} men.

ROBARD CLYFFORD.²

The xx.th yere of the rayne of the king E. the iiij.th, and xxvj. day of Feverer, he endented with the Lord Howard to do the king servisse in the retenu of the said Lord, nowe in this viage upon the see toward Scotlande, with iij.^c l. men wel harnessed; that is viij.^{xx} maryners, ix.^{xx} and x. lande men: the wages of the lande men viij. wekes is iiij.^{xx} xv.li.

The prest to the maryners xvj.li.

And for vitels of xvj. wekkes ij.^c iiij.^{xx} xj.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.

Summa iiij.^c ij.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.

The which he received of Fiztherberd.

The xiiij. day of April, my Lord toke a bil of signement to receive of Fiztherberd ij.^c xxxix.li.

So he is al paid for xvj. wekkes for iij.^c l. men, wages and vitell.

¹ See p. 9 of this vol. According to the endenture here inserted Lord Cobham was to furnish 220, or perhaps 230 men, instead of 160 men, as was provided by the previous agreement between him and Lord Howard.

² See p. 11. This endenture is substantially the same as the instrument there found. The date is also the same, "April" having been here altered to "Feverer."

AVRE CORNEBROUGH.¹

The xx.th yere of the king Edward the iiij.th, and xxvj. day of April, Avre endented with the Lord Howard to do the king servisse in the said Lord retenu, nowe in this viage toward Scotland upon the see, with vj.^c l. men, iiij.^c maryners, iii.^c l. land men.

The prest of maryners xxx.li.: viij. wekkes wages of iiij.^c l. lande men viij.^{xx} xv.li.

The vitels for xvj. wekkes of vj.^c l. men, xij.d. ob. a wekke a man v.^c xli.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.

Summa vij.^c xlvj.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.

The which summa he was paid of be the handes of John Fiztherberd, be the Lord Howard assignement.

Be it remembred these schippes folowing ar appointed to kepe the narrowe see.²

The Gras dieu, v.^c men. Item, the Grete Spaynard, c. iiij.^{xx} men.

The Caragon, ij.^c men. Item, the Mary of Calais iiij.^{xx} men.

The Mary Daubeney iiij.^{xx} men. Item, the kervel of Ewe c. men.

The Necolas of Touer lxx. men.

The nombre of the men in thes shippes are xij.^c x. men.

The wages for xvj. wekkes is . m. ij.^c x.li.

The vitels are m. viij.li. vj.s. viij.d.

Summa m. m. ij.^c xvij.li. vj.s. viij.d.

Whereof the said Avre received, first of John Fiztherberd be the Lord Howard assignement vij.^c xli.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.

The said Lord Howard hath taken to the said Avre anoder bil of signement to receive of the said Fitzherberd m. iiij.^c lxxj.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.

And so the said Avre is contented, for wages and vitels of xij.^c x. men that are apointed in the shippes to kepe the narowe see, for xvj. wekkes day.

SIR HARRY WEYNTWORTH.³

The xx.th yere of the king E. the iiij.th, and xxv. day of February, the said Sir Harry endented with the Lord Howard to do the king servisse upon the see, in the said Lord Howard retenue, for xvj. wekes with iiij.^c l. men wel harnessed; that is viij.^{xx} mariners, the prest is xvj.li., ix.^{xx}, and x. lande men, ther wages for viij. wekes iiij.^{xx} xv.li.

¹ See p. 11. The date here is different, but in other respects it is a similar agreement.

² Compare this list of ships, and their crews, with that on p. 3.

The vitels for iiij.^c l. men for xvj. wekkes ij.^c iiij.^{xx} xj.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.
Summa iiij.^c ij.li. xiiij.s. iiij.d.

The which summa he received be the Lord Howard assignement of John Fiztherberd.

The xxij. day of April, his servant Goldyngham received of the said Lord Howard ij.^c xxxix.li.

So he is al paid for wages and vitels for xvj. wekes for iiij.^c l. men.

JOHN WILLIAMSON.¹

The xx. yere of the reigne of the king E. the iiij.th, and in February, the said Williamson endented with the Lord Howard to do the king servisse nowe in this viage upon the see with xl. men wel harnessed, for xvj. wekkes day: ther wages and vitels draw to lxxiiij.li. vj.s. viij.d.

Whereof the Lord Howard toke Robt. Weston, Mercer of London, for John Willmson xxxvij.li. vj.s. viij.d.

And the xv. day of April, the said Lord toke to John Willmson xvj.li.

So he is al paid for viij. wekes wages, and for xvj. wekes vitels.

EDWARD BRAMPTON.²

The xx.th yer of the king, and xxvj. day of February, he endented with the Lord Howard to do the king servisse, in the said Lord retenu, nowe in the viage upon the see, with iiij.^c men wel harnessed, for xvj. wekkes; that is viij.^{xx} maryners: the prest is xvj.li. ij.s. xl. lande men, ther wages for viij. wekkes vj.^{xx}

The vitels for xvj. wekes of iiij.^c men iiij.^c xxxiiij.li. vj.s. viij.d.
Summa iiij.^c lxix.li. vj.s. viij.d.

The which summa he hath received be the assignement of the said Lord, of John Fiztherberd.

The xxj. yer of the king E. the iiij.th, the x. day of April, he had a bil of the said Lord Howard to receive of Fiztherberd ij.^c lxj.li. vj.s. viij.d.

¹ See p. 13. John Williamson is there called John Williams: the details also vary.

² See p. 12. The former indenture bears date one day earlier than the present.

And the said Lord paid be his owne handes iiij.li. x.s. viij.d.
 So he is al paid for wages and vitels of iiij.^c men for xvj. wekkes day.

² "Spertynes" were perhaps *serpentine*s, mentioned early in the MS.; or "tines," i. e. spikes for spears. This page only consists of scattered memoranda by Dalamare.

Right trusty and welbeloved,¹ we grete you wel, and late you wite that we sende at this time our trusty and right welbeloved Knight and Conseilor, Sir John Elryngton, tresorer of our hosold, to our town and porte of Newe Castel, to thentent that when our vitelers shalbe ther discarged, that than he manne them on warre fare, for to accompany and gef ther atendance upon you, to brenne the Lith and other vilages along the Scottisch see. Over this, we wil, and in our straitest wise require and charge you, that ye kepe the see nere about the said Lith unto the last day of August, acordyng to your endentur; which day doone and ended, we will that ye leve on the see six hundred men, whom we have commaunded to be vitailed and waged to the last day of October, in our ship called the Spaniard, in the ship wherof Willm Congersal is capiteyn, in the ship of Tomas Morys, in the bark wherof John Alys is capitein, in the ship of John Titney of Holy Yland, in the Anne of Foway: and that the surplus of our menne in your retenewe ye do convey unto our said porte and town of Newcastle. Faile not of the premisses, as our verey trust is in you. Yeven under our signet at our palais of Westmester, the vj. day of July.

In a cofer, a harneis compleyte, and a bykkete,¹ and a standart of meyle, and a peire of gussetes, and a folde of meyle, a salade garnessed with golde, x. lb. dates, and v. loffes of suger. A vestement,² a super altar, a corporas,³ a chalys, a mesbooke, an auter cloth.

In a gardviande, a peir brigandines, a plakart, ij. bavieres, iij. peire ganteletz, a salate garnessed with golde, anoder with a bokle and pendant gilte, a peir mahewtrys, and ij. olde bavieres; a peir brigandines, slyves of velwet.

In anoder cofer, iiij. peir schitz for my Lord,⁴ ij. bedschitz, ij. peir schites for the paylet, x. schertes, ij. armyng dobletz, and a jakete of leder, vj. napkins, iij. toayles, a keuvrepayn, vj. white bolles unkeuvryng, a grete bassyn of silver, a casse with iiij. gobeletz, a layer,⁵ a salt, a candelstik and iiij. sponys, a pyssyng bassyn of silver. Item, ij. lytel saltes of beral, and vj. silver sponys. Item, ij. grete potz of silver, a bagge with gussetz, ij. salades, a peir tabuls, a bagge with cheste men, a piece of canvas.

In a fardel, ij. federbedes, ij. bolsters, a materas with a bolster, a pylowe of doone, ij. spavers, a peir fustianes, a peir blankets, and a quylte, iiij. contrepoyntes of tapstery werke.

Item, vij. peir hosen.⁶

Item, a long gown of blak satin, lyned with purpil velwet.

² This and the following items, to the end of the memorandum, are connected with the service of religion, probably, on board Lord Howard's ship.

⁴ i.e. iiij. pair of sheets for my Lord. This entry and the next relate to the furniture, &c. of Lord Howard's cabins on board his ship.

⁵ A laver, most probably. See p. 138, n. 4.

⁶ This inventory of part of Lord Howard's wardrobe, which has no heading, occupies nearly the whole page.

Item, ij. dobletz of cremesyn satin.
 Item, a doblet, popegay colour.
 Item, a mantelyn of blewe velwet.
 Item, a schorte gown tany velwet.
 Item, a jaket of cloth of golde.
 Item, a jaket for the childe, Tousain.
 Item, ij. peir schone for caltroppes.¹
 Item, a peir arming schone.
 Item, ij. peir new slippers.
 Item, iij. peir other schone.
 Item, a piec of xxxvij. elnes for tabul cloth.
 Item, ij. newe tabul clothes for my Lord.
 Item, iij. coarser tabul cloth.
 Item, iij. coarser toayles.
 Item, a long gowne, russet, forred with leopardes.

Item, my Lord ²

Item, anoder coffer ther, wite cloth, and bonetes, and other gere.

 La Recuel des histories troianes.
 Labre des batailes.
 Pontius.
 Sir Baudin, cōte de Flandres.
 La belle d. s. mercy.
 Les Acusasions de la d.
 Le Myror delamort.

 Le Jeu des Des.
 Le Debat de la demoiselle et bō freres.

 Les d dessages.
 Paris et Vienne.

 apon rekynnyng xls. ; and so he hathe resseyved in all lxxj.li.

² "Platers of tre" are of course wooden platters.

³ The old meaning of to dyte is to prepare and in that sense it is here used: "dytenge" broad cloth is preparing, or dressing it.

⁴ What follows in the MS. is therefore in a different hand, until the return of Thomas Seynclow: his brother, Giles Seynclow, in the mean time kept the book.

¹ By "tabyr" we must understand taper.

² A "disguising" was a species of masque, of which frequent mention is made in the accounts of court-revels of a somewhat later date. This seems to have been an entertainment of the kind at the house of Lord Howard at Stoke. The account here given of the materials (bought at Sudbury) for a private "disguising" in a nobleman's residence at this early period is highly curious: it is in the hand-writing of Giles Seyncloew.

¹ Hence we see that Lord Howard was the owner of the shop in Cheapside where Sandys, the grocer with whom he dealt, carried on business. The rent appears to have been £1. 1s. 8d. a quarter, or £4. 6s. 8d. per annum.

² "Fygge dodes" perhaps expresses some peculiar kind of figs: above we have "a sort of figs" for a collection of figs. We have had "a toppet of figges" on p. 22, where a note is subjoined deriving "toppet" from tophet; but perhaps the true reading is tofet for "toppet." According to Bishop Kennet's Collections for a Glossary (Lansd. MSS. No. 1033.) tofet in the county of Kent means half a bushel, and he derives it from two and the Sax. fæt, peck, i.e. two pecks. At the same time we still every day talk of a "drum of figs" and as they were brought from the East in round cases, like drums, it is not all impossible that "toppet" means tophet, Hebrew for a drum. Palsgrave tells us that the ordinary expression was "a frayle of fygges," a frail being a species of basket, and we have "ij. frayles of fygges" on p. 354.

² This important entry, part of which is nearly illegible from injury to the MS. by damp, is crossed out with the pen, as well as the one which follows it. It is inserted again lower down on the same page. Edward IV. died on the 9th April, 1483.

³ As before, no sum is placed opposite this entry.

Item, the fyrst yere of the Kyng Edward the v.th¹ and the xv. day of May, my Lord gave un to my Lord Protectour a coppe of golde and a cure, weying lxxv. unces of goolld.

	Item, to Rychard Purpoynt for wages	iiij.s.
	Item, to Rychard of chambir for wache	iiij.d.

¹ This is a repetition of a preceding entry crossed out in the MS. It originally stood, properly, "Item, the fyrst yere" &c. but some person struck through "fyrst" and substituted "xxiiij.," as if it had been the 23rd of Edward IV.

² No "summa" is given. The same circumstance occurs lower down.

³ i.e. platters of tree, wooden platters.

Bollocke. } Item, paid, the same day, to Bolloke that he paid for a Preve Sealle for my Lord	xj.s.
Item, paid for makynge of the dressyng bord in the kechyn	vj.d.

¹ Possibly we ought to read "Item, to a man of Lord Stranges" &c. Lady Strange is mentioned just afterwards.

² Perhaps a book, and not a buck, which was generally differently spelt. Book is, however, usually spelt boke in this MS.

Thursday the xxvij. day, spent in howsolde Summa x.s. viij.d.
 Item, paid, that day, to Hamond that went on my Lordes arande to Thomas mente xij.d.

Summa xj.s. v.d. ob.

Summa totall on arr.⁶ xxix.li. v.s. vij.d.

¹ Possibly, by "Thomas How" we are to understand Sir Thomas Howard: some of the entries in this part of the MS. were obviously made in great haste.

² So spelt in the MS. Are we to understand by it "a quarter of an ounce of saffron?"

³ This and the following item are crossed out in the MS.

⁴ i.e. Corpus Christi day.

⁵ The book, after the item for the burial of Stephen Howth, or Howith, is kept for two pages in a different hand-writing, not seen in any other part of the MS.

⁶ By "on arr" we are perhaps to understand on arrear.

Saterday the laste day of May, spent in howsold xxxvj.s. v.d.

 mente to the clerke of the chyrch iiij.d.

R. a Calays. } Item, for a payre of hosen for Rychard of Caleys ij.s. vj.d.

¹ A "cache" or ketch is a small vessel. "Brekenlynsey" is Brightlingsea, hitherto usually spelt by other scribes in this MS. Brykelsey.

² Firth was the name of the owner of the ketch: he has been often mentioned before, but above, by this new clerk he is called Ferde.

³ Doubtless the same man who has hitherto been called Umfrey, or Humphery, a dealer in hides and leather.

⁴ After this entry the strange scribe (who does not seem to have known how to spell any of the names, although he wrote a much better hand) relinquished the keeping of the book to Thomas Seynclow.

Item, the same day, he paied to Perpoynte for to bye with otes for my Lordes horse at London iiij.s. iiij.d.

Item, the ij.^{de} day of June, ther was spent in fresh a cadis,¹ as it aperith in the boke of howsold xj.s. j.d. ob.

Summa vij.s. iiij.d.

Item, the iiij.th day of June, spent in howsold, as it aperyth more playnly be the boke of the same xj.s. iiij.d.

² The same nobleman mentioned on p. 282, and not Arthur Plantagenet, as he was called, the natural son of Edward IV. whom Stowe in his Chronicle, at the end of the reign of that monarch, styles Viscount Lisle, but who did not become so until 1533.

Item, the v. day of June, ther was spent in howsold, as it aperith more pleynly be the boke of the same x.s. iiij.d.

Item, the same day, Thomas Seynclow paied, be my Ladyes comaunde-

Item, the same day, more reseyved ynne, as it aperith be the said boke of howsold, to the some of xxvij.s. viij.d.

¹ "Wrytenges of lyvelode" probably mean writings relating to the livelikood. On the 28th of this month Viscount Berkeley was created Earl of Nottingham.

Item, the viij. day of June, ther was spent in howsold iiij.s. iiij.d.

Rec. Seynclow. } Item, Thomas Seynclow ress. that day of the Steward to take the catour iiij.li.

¹ Probably a new account book : here we have "book" spelt as on p. 395. Just below a buck is spelt "bocke." After this item, the account is kept in the hand-writing of Giles Seynclow.

² "Paid by her selfe" was added to this entry, but erased with a pen. "Tyres" is perhaps to be taken for attires, in the general sense of dresses ; but it may mean a particular ornament for the head.

³ "My Lady's grace" is the earliest indication in these accounts of Lady Howard having been raised to the rank of Duchess of Norfolk. Giles Seynclow seems to have been a better courtier than his brother.

⁴ Sic, in MS., but meaning spent.

My Lord. } Item, the same day, my Lord gave a man of my Lord of Item, the iiij.^{de} day, spent in howsold iiij.li. vj.s. xj.d.

¹ Perhaps a hawk: it may mean a horse, as it certainly does on p. 411; but we have "a horse" in the entry immediately preceding. "Of all birds of prey" (says Turberville in his 'Booke of Falconrie' 4to. 1611,) "that belong to the fauconers use, I know none less than the hoby, unless it be the merlin." Again: "She is of the number of those hawks that are high-flying and tower hawks."

² The MS. in this line and the next is defective owing to the damp: in the last instance the omitted word looks like "settyng," but it may be sheryng.

Goldsmeth, and he axsith for an harnes of gold to my Lordes swerd, weying a nownce di., at vj.d. weyte, ij.li. xij.s.

¹ The carrier of Stoke. His name has hitherto usually been spelt Maydestone.

² "Webys" are probably webs.—These nine pieces of hangings were ornamented with lions, because a lion was the crest of the Duke of Norfolk.

³ See p. 100, where the same sum is given to Lady Oxford. It stood originally, "to my Lord of Oxford," but "Lady" was substituted for Lord by interlineation.

⁴ Damp has here partially obliterated the writing.

⁵ These last words were subsequently added.

¹ Respecting the word "chappe," or chape, see p. 220, note 1. ² "Senett" is signet.

³ We have had cover spelt "cuer," on p. 391, and "cure" on p. 392, where occurs the entry of a cup of gold and cover to the Lord Protector.

⁴ The MS. is here slightly damaged by damp.

Wherof he hathe ress. at ij. paymentes xiiij.li., and xvij. qrtrs of malte, a bz., and iij. peckes, which drawyth v.li. xv.s. iiij.d.; and so rest to hym xv.li. iiij.s. viij.d. of the which he rec., in parte of payment of the debeth above wretyn, v.li. iiij.s. viij.d., and so rest to hym x.li. v.li. iiij.s. viij.d.

¹ This mode of spelling "henchmen" or "henschmen" (as we have it just above) may seem to support the etymology of the word from haunch, i.e. haunchmen, servants who stood at the side of their master. The arbitrariness of the orthography of the period cannot be much better illustrated than by the fact, that in the very following line the same word is spelt so differently.

Instructions yoven to the Kinges Comissioners of Aray and Mustres by the Erle of Oxenfford, having auctorite under the Kinges grete seall to gader arreyse, and conducte his said subgettes in array to his presence.

The saide Comissioners shall shewe to all Knyghtes, Esquiers, Gentilmen and Constables of towneshippes, that through the myght and grace of Almighty God and the good fortune and noble corage of the King, oure sovereigne lord in his last victorie, many of his traitours, rebellis and other mischevous people, which intendid the universall destruccion of this land, were slayne and many of them fledde and kepe them in secrete places to his highnes unknown. And that the King, oure sovereyne lorde, as well for the subduyng of the saide rebellis and traitours, as for the appeasyng and defence of the north parties of this land agayne his auncien enemyes the Scottes, entendith in his most riall persone, with a mighti power, to ryde in to the saide parties for the same entent.

Also the saide Comissioners shall shewe to the saide Knyghtes and oder, that the King will and streitly comaundeth that every Knyght, Esquiere, Gentilman, and townshipp, after ther degre and substaunce, shew ther trouthe, good will, and assistance to the King to come in ther persones, if thei may, and be able so to do, or elles in sending of men or money according to ther dutie. Alwey remembring the grete mischief that shuld have comen to this land, if the said traitours and rebellis had opteyned, as God hath of his grace otherwise provided.

Also the saide comissioners shall trewly and surely examyne what service and charge every Knyght, Squier, Gentilman, towneshipp, and other have doon and born at the laste journey, and whate thei and every of them will and shall doo at this viage nexte to come, and ther of make a remembraunce, to thentent that the King, our sovereyne lord, may geve every of his subgettes thanke after his demerite. Alwey provyded, that all suche as have doon to the King ther service in comyng in ther persones, sending of men, or monye sufficiently after ther substaunce, at the laste journey, be at this tyme spared and favored eyther to come or send.

Also the saide comissioners shall geve streitly in comaundement to all Constables, to make serche if the Kinges subgettes be sufficiently arrayed, according to the comandement yoven at the mustres, and to certifie the defautes.

A remembraunce of the names¹ for the surty of Roger Hastynges for the writte of Dedimus Potestatem to be directed to the Prior of Dursham, or the Prior of Tymouthe, or the Prior of Gysborn, or to every of thame.

Sir Thomas Grey, of Chillyngham in the county of Northūbre, knyght.

Sir Rauf Harbotell, of Prudow in the same county, knyght.

Sir John Middleton, of Belshowe in the same county, knyght.

Sir Robt. Meners, of Itell in the same county, knyght.

¹ This is a later memorandum, in an entirely different hand-writing.

ADDITIONAL NOTES AND CORRECTIONS.

P. 6, l. 28.—Robard Rye of Redyngton] So written in the MS. but by subsequent parts of the Volume (see p. 14, &c.) it appears that the name ought to be Robard Rys of Kedyngton. The scribe seems now and then to have been not well acquainted with the names of places.

p. 17, l. 8.—that my Lord schal have of hym iiij.c. goodes] A “good” seems to have been a measure of ten feet, usually spelt gode, and sometimes gad. See Mr. Way’s Promptorium p. 184, “Gad, to mete londe—decempeda pertica.”

p. 19, l. 28.—upon the making of a Serpentine] A Serpentine was a piece of artillery—Hall in his Chronicle, in the reign of Henry VIII., has this passage : “His campe was invironed with artillerie, as fawcones, serpentynez, cast hag-bushes.”

p. 25, l. 3.—thei schal make my Lord iiij.m. calthorpes] A calthorpe, as appears by various authorities, in its simplest form was what is described in the note; but sometimes calthorpes were furnished with five or even more spikes, in order to render it certain that one spike should always be erect, that it might enter the feet of the cavalry.

p. 33, l. 14.—Item, bering xij. paves to the peintor] “Paves” were shields, and they were painted for distinction or ornament. Sometimes they were smaller and borne by men, and sometimes larger and ranged round the deck of a ship for the protection of the crew from an enemy. See Strutt’s Dress and Habits &c. Vol. II. p. 42. Florio in his Ital. Dict. 1598 and 1611, has “Pavese, a kind of old fashioned target, a shield, a buckler, a palveise.” On p. 72 of this vol., is an item of “Paves of the Trenete” and another of the payment of a painter for painting them. In Skelton’s poem in praise of Henry VIII., preserved in his own MS. in the Rolls Chapel, he terms the King

“ Our prince of high honour,
Our paves, our succour.”

X X X

- p. 34, l. 15.—for whites] “Whites” is a term still employed, in the county of Norfolk in particular, for a species of white camlet, formerly an important part of the trade of the city of Norwich. “Whites” used to be exported in large quantities to the East Indies.
- p. 68, l. 26.—Item, to the Haque Man] For “Haque Man” read Hagne Man, i.e. Hackneyman. On p. 71, l. 22, “Laurens Haqueman” ought to be Laurens Haqneman.
- p. 85, l. 26.—and for the fustes] This word seems to have the same etymology as foist, fuste being Dutch for a vessel. In a former instance we have seen it spelt “fasse” in this MS., and there it may be taken for a corruption of the Latin vas, whence indeed fuste may be derived.
- p. 99, l. 3.—a peir of flokkards for my Lady Barneis] Strutt in his “Dress and Habits” &c. II. 373, describes a floket “a loose garment with large sleeves”—It may be doubted whether such be the meaning of “flokard,” or “a peir of flokkardes” in the text. The word “flokard” occurs again on p. 101. “Item, to her for a flokard for my Lady Barneis ——— iij.s.
- p. 110, l. 15.—The Lady Morpat] On p. 70 her name has also occurred, and there she is called “my Lady dame Anne Morpate.”
- p. 114, l. 27.—For Maude of the kechyn] Afterwards this name appears to be spelt Mande, and Monde; and sometimes the man is described as “of the bake-house:” possibly he changed his office.
- p. 126, l. 22.—Item, to the ryngers of Seynt Tanlonys cherch] It stands “Seynt Tanlonys” in the MS.; but it may be doubted whether we ought not to read “Seynt Tantony’s” or St. Antony’s church. The “Master of the children of St. Anthony” is mentioned on p. 161.
- p. 129, l. 1.—Item, paid to Hew Polford, otherwisse called Dyker] Hugh Polford was employed as a ditcher or “dyker,” and hence the confusion regarding his name in some of the entries. On p. 123 he is called “Hew, dicher,” i.e. Hugh the ditcher; but his real name appears to have been Polford.
- p. 145, l. 5.—The Plaiers of Kokesale] The performance must have taken place, not at Coggeshall, but at Colchester, by a body of actors who came from Coggeshall for the purpose of exhibiting.

p. 202, l. 5.—Item, to women on Hoc Monday] Hock-monday or High-monday (from heach, high, Sax.) is a feast still observed in Norfolk, Suffolk, and some of the eastern counties. Elsewhere it is generally applied to the harvest feast, which is called hockey, or hawkey, home. The feast commences fifteen days after Easter. According to Laneham's Letter from Kenilworth, Hock-tuesday was celebrated there before Queen Elizabeth in 1575.

p. 208, l. 9.—a qrtr porpays] It should seem that the porpoise was a fish not unfrequently eaten of old. In Skelton's "Speak, Parrot," we meet with this line

"With porpose and graundepose he may fede hym fatte."

The Rev. Mr. Dyce in his edit. of Skelton's Works, II. 346, explains "graundepose" to be grampus, and he is doubtless right: the spelling of the old word seems to explain its etymology.

p. 211, l. 25.—and the hengelis of a dore xij.d.] The old English word for a hinge was "hengyl" and so we find it spelt in the Promptorium, (Edit. Way, p. 235). "Hengyl of a dore or wyndowe, vertebra, vectis."

p. 219, l. 28.—for xxxiiij. yerdes and di. of Kendall] Lord Howard had just returned from Kent, and it is probable that what he bought was cloth called "Kentish Kendall," of which we find mention in Hall's Chronicle, where he speaks of an unexpected visit from Henry VIII. and his nobles to the Queen, "all appareled in shorte cotes of Kentishe Kendall." The word Kendall seems of itself to have denoted green, without the addition of the colour: we have "Kendall" and "narrow Kendall" mentioned on p. 222.

p. 243, l. 28.—With reference of this memorandum] Read "with reference to this memorandum."

p. 244, l. 29.—For "endenture" read indenture. The same misprint occurs three lines lower.

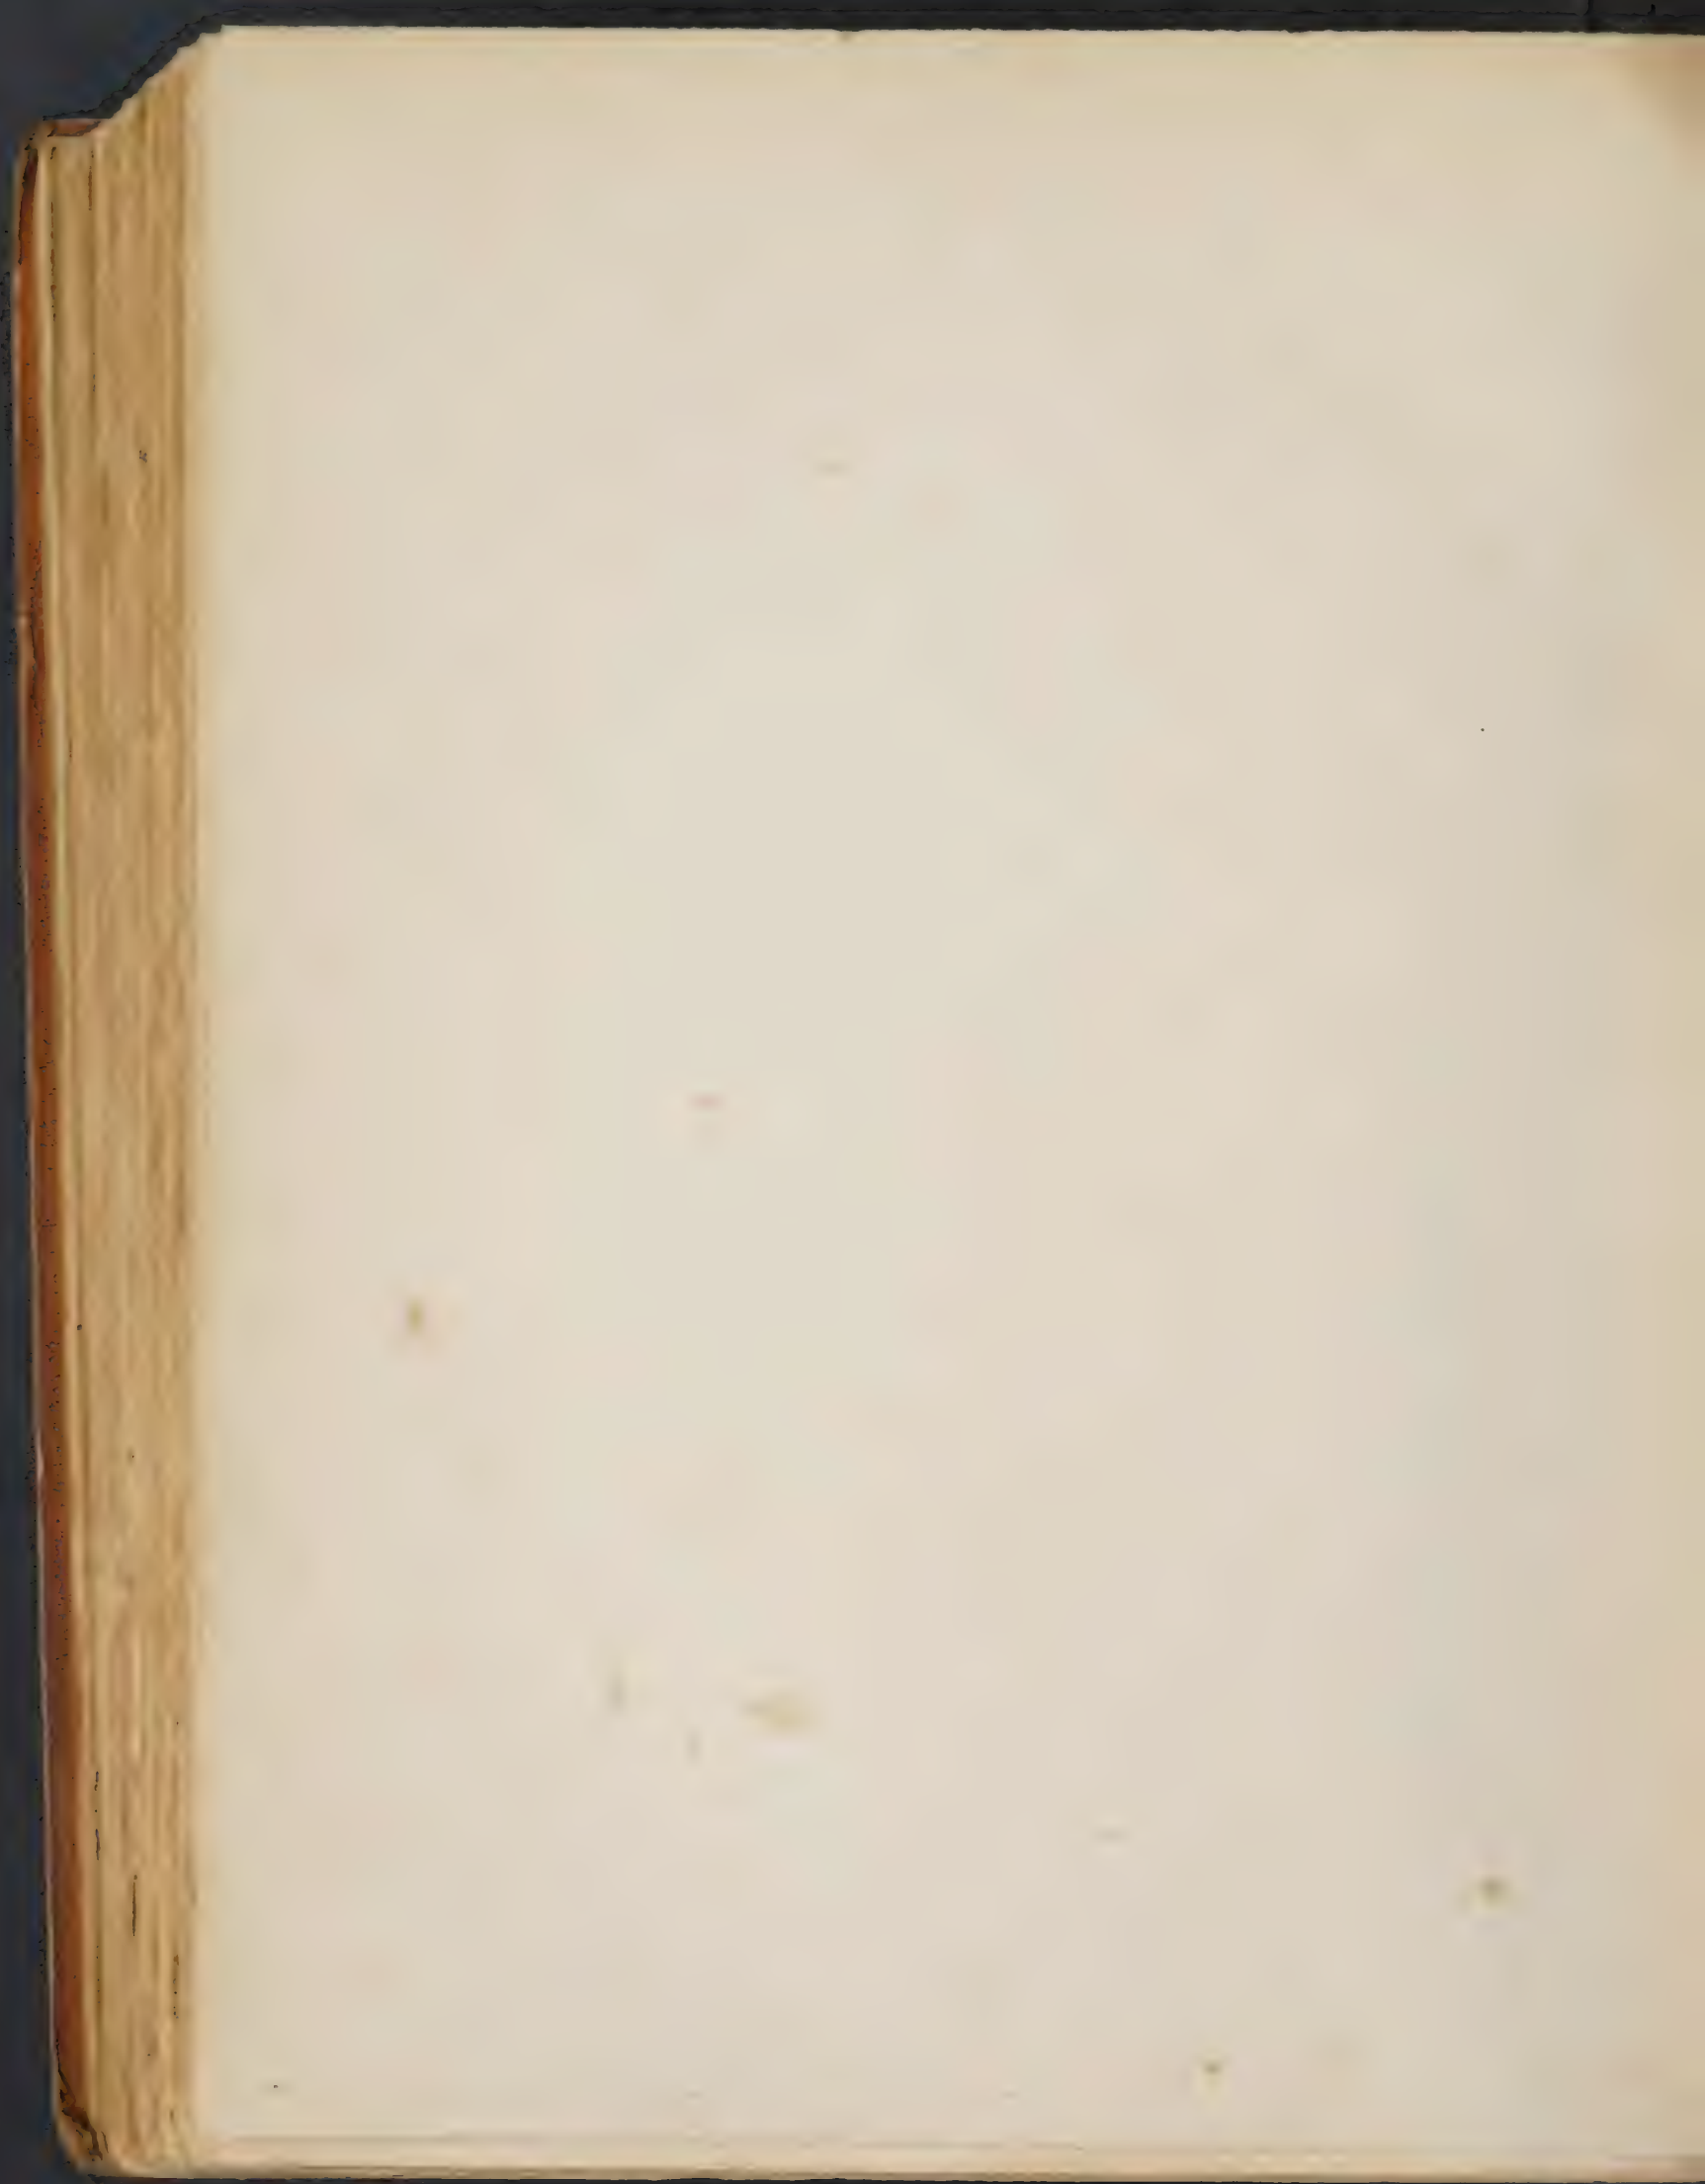

p. 284, l. 28.—My Lord sent home to my Lady in angelletes] Angelletes, if derived from the Fr. angelot, ought properly to be so spelt. An "angelot" was of the value of half an angel, and according to some authorities "angelots" were first coined in Paris by the English, when they had possession of the French capital. This, however, may be doubted and no such origin to the "angelot" is given by French writers.

- p. 285, l. 20.—To the pour of Seynt Mary Overyse] For "pour" read priour.
- p. 297, l. 8.—for xij. yerdes of blanket] It may be doubted whether "blanket" in this entry be not the same commodity as "white," or "whites," in previous parts of the manuscript. See p. 34, &c.
- p. 327, l. 9.—Item, paid to Jeffery for a bale of dysse] That is a bale, or pair, of dice; but why a pair of dice was anciently called a "bale" has not been explained: possibly, from βαλιος speckled, or from βαλλω to throw. The expression occurs in our oldest writers, and it did not go out of use until about the time of the Restoration.
- p. 339, l. 19.—Item, for ij. lb. of arsowde] Usually spelt Orsedue in the Revels Accounts, where it is a common item. See Mr. P. Cunningham's Extracts (printed for the Shakespeare Society) passim. It seems to have been a metallic imitation of gold, and Chapman in some verses prefixed to "The Ghost of Richard III." by C. B. 1614, spells it Orsadine, and explains for what purpose it was used:
- "Tis pageant orsadine,
That goes for gold."
- p. 343, l. 25.—The xix. day of Jenever, my Lork] For "Lork" read Lord.
- p. 359, l. 7.—he gaff Gaudayes wiff] Perhaps we ought to read Gandayes wiff, as a person of the name of Gangday has been before mentioned: in old MS. it is often impossible to distinguish between u and n.
- p. 379, l. 1.—Item, the ssme day] Read "Item, the same day."
- p. 381, l. 24.—Item, for iiij. payre wombes] The pieces of wood, or iron, placed on each side of a horse's collar, to which the traces are fastened, are still called waimes and haimes in Essex: this may be what is meant in the entry.
- p. 388, l. 20.—Tysday the xix. day] The date ought certainly to be the xxix. day of April, but the MS. has it "xix day."
- p. 421, l. 6.—for Wekys] Read Webys.

- p. 449, l. 11.—Item, to my Lady Chamberleyne's man] The mode in which the Lord Chamberlain's lady is thus spoken of by her husband's title is somewhat remarkable. William Lord Hastings, who had been Lord Chamberlain to Edward IV., was beheaded in 1483.
- p. 460, l. 2.—Item, to my Lord of Notingham's man] This was William Baron Berkeley, who was created Earl of Nottingham in June, 1483.
- p. 464, l. 5.—And the same day, my Lord paid to Robard Hoode for viij. shaftys] "Shaftys" are of course arrows, and the coincidence that the Duke bought them of a person of the name of Robin Hood is singular.
- p. 480, l. 6.—Item, my Lord is through with his servaunt Robert Worsly] The expression "is through" has occurred before, and it means that the agreement, or engagement, is complete. It is found in "Henry IV." part 2, Act I. sc. 2, and elsewhere in Shakespeare.
- p. 507, l. 6.—whereof xl.s. was dew to hym] Here, and just afterwards, we ought to read xl.d., the scribe having committed a clerical error, as the addition shows.
- p. 509, l. 5.—Item, delyverd to M. Sir John Paston's man] This seems the only instance in which a member of the Paston family is mentioned.
- p. 512, l. 27.—the vj.th yere of K. H. vij.th] Read "the vj.th yere of R. H. vij.th"
- p. 516, l. 14.—for the surfelyng of nappre] "Sufeling" seems to have been part of the early mode of bleaching, by sulphur-water. This was the process that the linen cloth, or "napery," went through in the hands of John Peryman. The verb to "surfle" seems to have been sometimes confounded with purfle.
- p. 520, l. 1.—in my Lord Latmer's chamber] So called in the MS.; but it seems elsewhere that he was not summoned to Parliament until 7 Henry VII. as "Ricardus Nevill de Latimer, chivaler."
